IAG Group Leadership Team update

IAG has announced Amanda Whiting will take on a newly created role on the Group Leadership Team as Group Executive, Enterprise Growth and Simplification.

Ms Whiting has been Chief Executive of IAG New Zealand for the past four and a half years. Phil Gibson was appointed to this position, following Ms Whiting's decision last year to return to Australia, and commences in his new role today.

"Amanda is a strong leader and an important member of our executive team," said Nick Hawkins, IAG Managing Director and Chief Executive.

"This new role will leverage her track record in driving growth and delivering results, both in her time leading our New Zealand business and before that in various leadership roles in Australia.

"Amanda has a deep understanding of market dynamics, customer needs and preferences, and how to deliver distinct and differentiated strategies for retention and growth.

"At the same time, she appreciates the need to continually simplify our organisation, in service of our customers and our growth ambitions. This will be the focus of this enterprise-level role.

"It is an exciting and challenging time, as we help more customers prepare for and recover from adversity, and continue our leadership role in advocating for risk reduction, ensuring a sustainable and insurable future for Australia and New Zealand. Our newly expanded Group Leadership Team has the diversity and depth of expertise required to deliver on our purpose, strategy and aspirations," Mr Hawkins said.

This release has been authorised by IAG's Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer.
